They could then design a new strip – or a fancy dress that would be suitable for a cycle race. • They could write a thank you letter, either on behalf of the family or the fire service, to thank Sam for his assistance during the fire, or they could write a news report or article about him. This would entail creating background information, e.g. where he lives, which school he attends etc. Similarly, pupils could write a script for a TV programme, where the presenter interviews Sam. • In addition, pupils could search for information about cyclists from Wales or about cycle races such as the Tour de France which they could then write about.

Please see the fact files entitled Parafeddyg (Paramedic) and Diffoddwr Tân (Firefighter) for suggestions. Similarly, pupils could discuss celebrities and ordinary people who are “heroic.” • After focusing on the language patterns and vocabulary contained in this book and in the other reading materials, pupils could write a similar book or prepare a presentation or fact file about their heroes. They could also make a scrapbook using an appropriate app. They could then read each other’s work. • They could also hot seat one of the heroes in this book.
